JOHN W. TRIST, Gentleman, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, Solicitor. Armorial bearings as used are for Arms: Azure, a quartrefoil within an orle of eight estoiles wavy of six points or; and for his Crest, upon a mount vert, an osprey or sea-eagle proper, holding in the beak a fish argent; with the Motto, "Nec triste nec trepide." These arms were exhibited at the Visitation of the county of Northampton in 1681 by Thomas Tryst of Maydford, in that county, when he recorded his pedigree. The arms, however, were not allowed him, as he was unable to establish a right thereto, and no grant of them ever appears to have been made, except with a slight variation to Trist of Bowden, in the county of Devon, in 1709. Consequently as used they are of no authority, and, moreover, the above-mentioned John W. Trist, Gentleman, has not established any descent at the College of Arms from either of the families as quoted above. Postal address—62 Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

WALLACE, quartered by CAMPBELL.

WALLACE, Baronet (Scotland), created in 1669. This title, which is believed to have become extinct on the death without issue male of the fifth Baronet, was assumed, with the name of Wallace, by Thomas Dunlop, son of his only daughter and heiress, as sixth Baronet, on the ground that the Baronetcy had been created with remainder to heirs general, and not to heirs male only. Even if this were so, however, the representation would have been through the daughters of the third and not of the fifth Baronet. The title has been assumed by successive representatives of Thomas Dunlop Wallace as seventh, eighth, and ninth Baronets, but on the death in 1892 of the so-called ninth Baronet, his representative, Mr. John Alexander Agnew Wallace of Edinburgh, decided not to take the title.

WARD, see BANGOR and DUDLEY.

WARD, Baronet (England), created in 1660. This title became extinct in 1770, on the death of Sir Edward Ward, eighth Baronet, of Bixley Hall, in the county of Norfolk, but has been, with the name of Ward, assumed by Mr. Charles S. G. Green, Member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, London, of 54 Edbrooke Road, St. Peter's Park, Paddington, who claims both title and estates on the ground of direct descent from Sir Edward, the fifth Baronet, through his daughter Susan, who married the third Earl Rosebery, and died reputedly without issue in 1774. The proof of his descent, however, appears to be dependent upon a suggested mutilation of the Parish Register, and the recovery of deeds supposed by rustic tradition to have been deposited in the vault upon the burial of Lady Rosebery; and, even in the improbable event of the descent being made out, the claim to the title through female descent is not supported by the original grant on the Patent Roll, and could not be established.
