INTERNATIONALIZE COOPERATION BETWEEN CULTURAL SCIENTISTS AND WIKIMEDIANS

Kuwiki is an initiative that aims to help art historians recognize and reflect on Wikipedia as a repository of knowledge, a working tool, and an important medium of knowledge communication—and to finally become actively involved in the online encyclopedia.

HOW YOU COULD COOPERATE WITH KUWIKI

Project I: A Living Handbook for Art History Articles

We are developing suggestions for the structure of the articles, for the correct use of specialized terminology, and for ensuring scholarly quality. The project is open, so that changes and further developments are possible at any time.

The Living Handbook is intended to contribute to good art history articles—the articles should meet the requirements of both the discipline and Wikipedia.

LET'S ADAPT THE HANDBOOK TO YOUR COMMUNITY AND LANGUAGE!

Project II: Wikipedia in university teaching

In the past, art history lecturers hardly thought about the potential of the free online encyclopedia for use in teaching.

This has now changed—at many universities, work on the encyclopedia is now a regular part of teaching.

The kuwiki project aims to present the teaching formats tested so far as well as their results and to make the experience gained accessible. In the coming months, a handout with tips for university teaching will be created.

LET'S SHARE TOOLS AND IDEAS ON WP IN RESEARCH AND TEACHING!

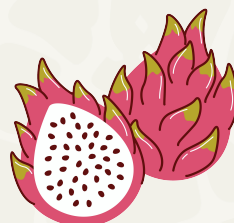

Project III: Art scholars take photos for Wiki Loves Monuments

For the first time in 2023, kuwiki is calling on colleagues from museums, universities and heritage conservation, from art education and provenance research to take part in the competition. The appeal will be disseminated in August and September 2023 via German-speaking professional and specialist associations. Kuwiki supports interested colleagues with an online question and answer session.
